after- in comb. is used in various relations prepositional, adverbial, and adjectival, not always easy to separate, and in various senses. In some of these the combination is very loose, the use of the hyphen being mainly syntactical, i.e. to show that the grammatical relation between after and the following word is something else than the ordinary one of preposition and object. Cf. 'After consideration I resolved to decline' and 'After-consideration has shown me that I was wrong.' 'I should know him after years had passed' with 'I know not what after-years may bring.' Otherwise it is unnecessary, as 'the events of after years.' See AFTER a.

again (ə'gɛn, ə'geɪn), adv., prep., conj. Forms: 1 ongegn, ongægn, ongeægn, ongén, onȝeán, onȝán; later aȝén, aȝeán, aȝán. South. 2 onȝein, oȝein, anȝen, 2-4 aȝein, aȝen, aȝé, 3 aë, 3-4 aȝeyn, aȝayn, ayé, 4 ayein, aȝeen, 5 ayhen, ayhé, 5-6 ayen(e. North. 4 ogayn(e, ogain(e, 4-6 agayn(e, again(e, (Sc. agane, agone). Midl. 3 onnȝænn, aȝean, aȝan, aȝeon, aȝon, agen, 3-4 ageyn, 5-6 ageyn(e, agein(e, agayn(e, 5-7 againe, 7-9 again, in poets agen. [1. OE. like the cogn. langs. shows two forms: (1) onȝeán, earlier onȝeaȝn*, onȝeæȝn, ongægn, ongagn*, OHG. in gagan, cf. ON. gagn sb., gagn- adv. pref.; (2) onȝén, earlier onȝegn, ongegn, OS. angegin, OHG. in gegin, in gegini (MHG, engegene, engein, mod.G. entgegen), ON. i gegn (Sw. igen, Dan. igjen); f. on, in + (1) gagn, (2) gegn, best explained as:—gag(a)na*, gag(a)ni*, variant O- and I- stems of gag(a)n. Not found in Gothic. From onȝén came the various southern forms of which ayen was the type; from the earlier ongegn, onȝegn, the type ayein; from aȝeán, the southern and midl. types ayan, ayon; from the earlier ongægn, ongæȝn (perh. influenced later by Norse), the northern a-gain. The late agen was a mixed form between ayen and again, and showed the common literary pronunciation even when again was written; hence it was used by the poets down to the present century (found 1834), but this is now obs. 2. The primary meaning of gagn, gegn seems to have been 'direct, straight' (see GAIN a. and sb., and cf. ON. gegn adj.), whence on-gegn 'in a direct line with, opposite, facing locally,' and so extended to all ideas of meeting, opposition, reversal, recurrence, repetition. Originally a separable adverbial particle, as in ongegn-cuman, which, when separated from the vb., became an adv. or prep. according to the construction: he cymeð aȝén, he him cymeð aȝén, he cymeð him aȝén, he cymeð aȝén him or hine. 3. As early as 1130 there arose in the south a variant with advb. genitive aȝenes, againes, corrupted bef. 1400 to aȝenst, against (see next word) as the prepositional form. Early in 16th c. again was restricted to the advb. use, and against alone used as prep. (and conj.). In Sc. and north Eng. where against was not adopted, again still retains all its early constructions, occasionally borrowed also by southern writers since 1525.]

agnail ('ægneɪl). Forms: 1 angnæȝl, 5 agnayl, -lle, 6 angnaylle, angnale, agnale, 6-7 agnayle, agnell, 7 agnel, agnaile, 7- agnail. [A word of which the application (and perhaps the form) has been much perverted by pseudo-etymology. The OE. angnæȝl is cogn. w. OHG. ungnagel, mod.G. dial. anneglen, einnegeln (E. Müller), Fris. ongneil, ogneil; f. ang- (Goth. aggwus, cf. angsum), compressed, tight, painful + næȝl, Goth. nagls nail. The latter had here the sense, not of 'finger-nail,' unguis, but of a nail (of iron, etc.) clāvus, hence, a hard round-headed excrescence fixed in the flesh; cf. wer-næȝl, WARNEL, a wart, lit. 'man-nail' (as opposed to 'door-nail,' 'wall-nail,' etc.). So, L. clāvus was both a nail (of iron, etc.) and a corn in the foot. Subsequently -nail was referred to a finger- or toe-nail (unguis), and the meaning gradually perverted to various (imaginary or real) affections of the nails: see senses 2, 3.]

†1. A corn on the toe or foot. Obs.

2. Any 'painful swelling,' 'ulcer,' or 'sore,' under, about, around the toe- or finger-nail; in J. and subseq. Dicts. identified with whitlow. [This change of explanation seems due to pseudo-etymology; whether confusion with Fr. 'angonailles, botches, (pocky) bumps, or sores,' Cotgr., or med.L. anghiones, anguinalia, carbuncles, contributed the 'ulcers' or 'sores' is uncertain; but -nail, misinterpreted, fixed the locality. The further identification with whitlow (in the Dicts.) seems due to collating the Gr. name of the latter παρονυχία (f. παρ' beside + ὄνυχ- nail) with ag-nail (quasi ag- at + nail). Ash explains agnail as 'a whitlow, paronychia,' and paronychia as 'a perpetual sore under the root of the nail, a whitlow.']

3. A 'hang-nail'; see quot. [Hang-nail, given by Halliwell as a dialect word, is evidently like the Sc. equivalent anger-nail (ANGER = irritation, inflammation), a corruption of ang-nail, putting a plausible meaning into it. That is, ang-nail, dialectally pronounced hang-nail, was explained as 'hanging' or detached nail. This explanation of agnail appears first in Bailey 1737 (ed. 1736 having only sense 2); the form hang-nail is in Craig 1847, and is now commoner in London than agnail.]

air (ɛə(r)), sb.[1] Forms: 3–5 eir, 4–5 eyr, 4–6 eyre, aier, 4–7 ayre, 5 eyir, eire, 5–6 eyer, ayer, 5–7 aire, 6 eyere, 6–7 ayr, 7 aër, 7– air. [Br. I. II. a. OFr. air (Pr. air, aire, Sp. aire, Pg. ar, It. aire, aere):—L. āer-em, a. Gr. ἀήρ, ἀέρ-α, f. ἀ-ειν, ἀ-ῆναι (ἀε-) to blow, breathe. (Mod.It. has largely substituted aria:—L. āerea adj. for aere. Cf. Florio 1598 'Aere (aire, aira) the aire. Also, an aspect, countenance, cheere, a look or apparance in the face of man or woman. Also, a tune or aire of a song or ditty.' 'Aria, as aere, the aire.') Br. III. IV. did not arise from I. in Eng. but were adopted *c*1600 from Fr. air = apparence, extérieure, manière d'être, also suite de tons et de notes qui composent un chant, the connexion of which with atmospheric air is disputed.

1. Littré makes them two words, identifying air, manner, with OFr. aire 'area, open place, AERIE' q.v. (which was occasionally masc.) through the chain of ideas 'nest, stock, family, family character, derived manner,' comparing phrases like faucon de bon aire, hawk of a good sort (stock, aerie); but no formal connexion can be traced between OFr. aire and mod. Fr. air, while OFr. aire never had the sense of 'external appearance,' which is moreover quite a late sense of mod.Fr. air (end of 16th c.). Die2, after Burguy, inclines to identify the two senses, through the ideas of 'air, breath, spirit, character, manner,' comparing the range of L. spiritus, originally 'breath, air.' 2. It seems probable that the sense of 'manner' was adopted in Fr. from It. in which it is of old standing (see Florio above). Die2 says that the Pr. di bon aire (Fr. de bon aire) was adopted in It., and aire treated as the native aere, aire, aria, whence di buon' aria; hence it is not impossible that the development of senses supposed by Littré, may have taken place in It. and thence been transferred in 16th c. to Fr. air. 3. But it is more probable that there was no confusion with aire = aerie, and that the idea of manner—'external manner, appearance, mien,' rather than 'innate character'—is a simple extension of the idea of the 'enveloping or affecting atmosphere special to a place, or situation' as when one is said to carry with him the 'air of the office' (Fr. air du bureau), or to catch 'the air of the court,' Shaks. (see below; cf. La Bruyere 'L'air de cour est contagieux, il se prend à Versailles, comme l'accent normand à Rouen') which Littré himself refers to 'atmosphere,' and which is not separable from 'an air of gentility, of truth,' etc. This would also best accord with Br. IV. undoubtedly of It. origination, aere, aria, (see Florio above), here translating L. modus 'manner,' also 'musical mode, metre, measure, melody.'] akimbo (ə'kɪmbəʊ), adv. (and a.) Forms: 5 in kenebowe, 7 on kenbow, a kenbow, a kenbol, a kenbold, on kimbow, (a-gambo), 7–8 a-kemboll, 8–9 a kembo, a kimbo, 8– a-kimbo, akimbo. [Deriv. unknown. Prof. Skeat (Append.) gives a suggestion of Magnussen, comparing the earliest known forms with Icel. keng-boginn, -it, 'crooked' (Vigfusson), lit. 'bent staple-wise, or in a horse-shoe curve'; other suggestions are a cambok in the manner of a crooked stick (ME. cambok, med.L. cambūca, see CAMMOCK); a cam bow in a crooked bow. None of these satisfies all conditions.

The difficulty as to a-cambok, a cam bow, is that no forms of the word show cam-, from which the earliest are the most remote. The Icel. keng-boginn comes nearer the form, but there is no evidence that it had the special sense of a-kimbo, and none that the latter ever had the general sense of 'crooked.' It also postulates an early Eng. series of forms like keng-bown* or keng-bowed*, keng-bow*, akengbow*, quite unknown and unaccounted for.]

al, obs. form of ALL, retained in comp. in albeit, almighty, almost, alone, already, although, always.

al- *pref.*¹ The assimilated form of L. ad- to, before l. In OFr. reduced to a-, as in alier, for which however al- was often restored as an 'etymological' spelling in 14–15th c. in Fr. and Eng. In modern words adopted or formed from Latin the al- is always retained, as allegation, alliterate. Sometimes erroneously for a- in other words as a(l)lay.

al- *pref.*² The Arabic article the, retained as an essential part of the word in various words of Arabic origin, adopted in Eng. as alcohol, alcove, alcoran, algebra, alkali, almagest, almanac, etc.

-al *suffix*¹, of adjs. and sbs. I. adj. 1. repr. L. -ālem (-ālis, -āle, stem -āli-) adj. suff. = 'of the kind of, pertaining to,' varying in some words with -ār-em, the form always used when l preceded; thus tāl-, quāl-, nātāl-, ōrāl-; ālār-, stellār-, regulār-; līneāl- and lineār-. In words that survived, -ālem became in OFr. and hence in early Eng. -el, as mortālem, mortel. But, to some extent in Fr. and entirely in Eng. this was afterwards refashioned after L., as -al, on the analogy of which L. adjs. in -ālis and Fr. in -el have since been englished without limit. 2. The number of these adjs. in -ālis has been immensely increased in med. and mod. L.; and in the mod. Rom. langs. and E. this has become a suffix addable to any L. sb., as seen in agminal, bas-al, cordi-al, document-al, margin-al, nation-al, pred-al, circumstanti-al, constitution-al, denomination-al, longitudin-al, proportion-al, providenti-al, prudenti-al, antipestilenti-al, none of which are found in ancient L. Following L. precedent (as in boreāl-em, hebdomadāl-em, theātrāl-em) -al is also suffixed to Gr. sbs., as in baptism-al, cathedr-al, coloss-al, chor-al, octagon-al, patriarch-al. 3. In L., secondary adjs. in -ālem were formed on other adjs., esp. when these were used substantively, as in æquum æquāl-em, annu-um annuāl-em, diurn-um diurnāl-em, infern-um infernāl-em, vern-um vernāl-em. This process has been greatly extended in the mod. langs., esp. in E. where -al (like -ous) is a living formative, freely applied to L. adjs. in -eus, -ius, -uus, -rnus, -is, and other endings, to give them a more distinctively adj. form; thus, aere-al, corpore-al, funere-al, senatori-al, continu-al, individu-al, perpetu-al, etern-al, patern-al, celesti-al, terrestri-al, magnific-al. This is extended to Gr. adjs. in -κός, -οειδής, which also frequently gave substantives (music, tactics, rhomboid), so that, as adj. suffixes, -acal, -ical, -oidal occur earlier in E. than the simple -ac, -ic, -oid; when the two co-exist, as in comic-al, tragic-al, historic-al, that in -ic, etc. means 'of or belonging to' the thing, that in -ical 'relating to, dealing with, indirectly or remotely connected with' the thing, as a historic answer, a historical treatise, a comic paper, a comical idea. See -AC, -IC, -OID. Other suffixes are also added, as in central-ly, -ize, -ization, formal-ity.

II. sb. 4. Adjs. in -al- in various genders and numbers were used substantively in L., thus rivāl-is, annāl-es, animal, tribūnal, sponsāli-a, Baccānāli-a. Many of these have been adopted in E., directly or through Fr., as rival, annals, animal, Bacchanals, penetralia, Saturnalia; and the number has been increased by the mod. sb. use of many which were only adj., or did not exist in L., as cardinal, principal, moral, oval, signal, regimentals, canonicals. 5. Nouns in -ālia (neut. pl.) which survived into OFr. became -aille (fem. sing.) with pl. -ailles, adopted in ME., as -aylle, -aille, later -aile, -al, as L. sponsāli-a, OFr. espousaille-s, E. spousaille, spousaile-s; L. battālia*, OFr. bataille, Eng. bataille, -aile, -ail, now battle. On this analogy, -aille, -ail, -al became an Anglo-Fr. and E. formative of nouns of action on vbs. of Fr. or L. origin, as in AFr. arrivaille arrival; so of later formation (some quite modern) 'revival, survival, approval, removal, avowal, renewal; acquittal, committal, transmittal, refutal, recital, requital; dismissal, perusal, refusal, carousal, rehearsal, reversal, revisal, reprisal, surprisal; dis-, inter-, pro-, re-, sup-, transposal; trial, denial, decrial'; occas. also on native final-accented vbs. as 'bestowal, betrothal, beheadal.' Bridal and burial simulate this ending, but have a different origin; yet they have probably aided the prevalence of these nouns of action in -al in mod. Eng.

alarm (ə'lɑ:m), sb. Forms: 4-7 alarme, 6-7 all arme, 7 all-arm, all' army, 6- alarm. Also: 4 alarom, 6 alarome, 7 allarum, 6- alarum. [a. OFr. alarme, a. It. allarme = all' arme! 'To (the) arms!' orig. the call summoning to arms, and thus, in languages that adopted it, a mere interjection; but soon used in all as the name of the call or summons. Erroneously taken in the 17th c. for an English combination all arm! and so written; cf. similar treatment of alamode and alamort. From the earliest period there was a variant alarum due to rolling the r in prolonging the final syllable of the call, now restricted to an alarm-signal, as the peal or chime of a warning bell or clock, or the mechanism producing it. (The earlier pronunciation, following alarm, was (ə'lɑ:rəm); but this has given way to (ə'leərəm) and (ə'lærəm).) Hence also, by aphesis, LARUM.]

Gr. χημία, χημεία, found (c. 300) in the Decree of Diocletian against 'the old writings of the Egyptians, which treat of the χημία (transmutation) of gold and silver'; hence the word is explained by most as 'Egyptian art,' and identified with χημία, Gr. form (in Plutarch) of the native name of Egypt (land of Khem or Khamè, hieroglyphic Khmi, 'black earth,' in contrast to the desert sand). If so, it was afterwards etymologically confused with the like-sounding Gr. χῡμεία, pouring, infusion, f. χυ- pf. stem of χέ-ειν to pour, cf. χῡμός juice, sap, which seemed to explain its meaning; hence the Renascence spelling alchymia and chymistry. Mahn (Etym. Unt. 69) however concludes, after an elaborate investigation, that Gr. χῡμεία was probably the original, being first applied to pharmaceutical chemistry, which was chiefly concerned with juices or infusions of plants; that the pursuits of the Alexandrian alchemists were a subsequent development of chemical study, and that the notoriety of these may have caused the name of the art to be popularly associated with the ancient name of Egypt, and spelt χημεία, χημία, as in Diocletian's decree. From the Alexandrians the art and name were adopted by the Arabs, whence they returned to Europe by way of Spain. Of the 14–15th c. forms, Alconomy was evidently assimilated to Astronomy, the two sciences going together.]

1. The chemistry of the Middle Ages and 16th c.; now applied distinctively to the pursuit of the transmutation of baser metals into gold, which (with the search for the alkahest or universal solvent, and the panacea or universal remedy) constituted the chief practical object of early chemistry.

5. a. Organ. Chem. An extensive class of compounds, of the same type as spirit of wine, composed of carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen, some of which are liquid and others solid.

They may be regarded as water (HOH) with one of its hydrogen atoms replaced by a hydro-carbon radical as Methyl (CH_3), Ethyl (C_2H_5), Propyl (C_3H_7), Butyl (C_4H_9), Amyl (C_5H_{11}) etc., according to the character of which, the alcohol is monocarbon or methyl, dicarbon or ethyl, tricarbon or propyl, etc.; or as paraffins (Methane CH_4, Ethane C_2H_6, Propane C_3H_8, etc.) with one or more of their hydrogen atoms replaced by equivalent atoms of hydroxyl (HO), according to the number of which atoms replaced, the alcohol is monatomic, diatomic, triatomic, etc. Tricarbon alcohols are primary or secondary, tetracarbon and higher alcohols are primary, secondary, or tertiary, according as the carbon atom united to the hydroxyl atom is also directly in contact with one, two, three other carbon atoms of the molecule. Isomeric alcohols are such as have the same percentage composition but a different arrangement of atoms in the complex molecule, and are physically different substances. The number of possible alcohols is apparently unlimited. [This extension of the name to a genus was made by Dumas and Péligot in 1834–5, in pointing out the analogy between wood-spirit (Methyl alcohol) and spirit of wine; in 1836, they identified another member of the series in ethal (Cetyl alcohol); in 1844, Cahours found another (Amyl alcohol) in Fusel oil; after which the recognition of 'alcohols' went on rapidly.]

common (vinous or vinic) alcohol (see prec. sense) is a primary, monatomic, dicarbon or ethyl alcohol, C_2H_6O, and may be considered as water, in which one atom of hydrogen is replaced by an atom of ethyl, or C_2H_5; thus $C_2H_5.OH$ instead of H.OH.

1. A senior, signor, superior, ruler; a noble or person of high rank.

In OE. the special title of one exercising authority under the king, over a former kingdom, as Mercia, a district, or county; a viceroy or lord-lieutenant. Used also to translate Lat. princeps, subregulus, optimas, satrapa, dux, comes, præpositus; and, in a more general sense, many other words, as pontifex, architriclinus, presbyter, senator, etc. The special title was mostly supplanted by earl under the Danish dynasty; the more general sense continued for several centuries, and gave rise to 2 and 3. For the OE. title, recent historical writers have used the late West-Saxon and Kentish ealdorman; but the general OE. form was aldormann.

1. An intoxicating liquor made from an infusion of malt by fermentation. Various ingredients have at various times been added to impart flavour; at present hops or other bitters are in use.

Ale and beer seem originally to have been synonymous. The Alvismál says 'öl heitir með mönnum, en með Ásum bjórr,' it is called 'ale' among men, and among the gods 'beer.' After the introduction into England of 'the wicked weed called hops' (Retn. to Edw. VI's Parlt.) c 1524, 'beer' was commonly hopped; at present 'beer' is in the trade the generic name for all malt liquors, 'ale' being specifically applied to the paler coloured kinds, the malt for which has not been roasted or burnt; but the popular application of the two words varies in different localities.

Chem.* A series of the compounds called BASES, with well-marked characters, analogous to, and including soda, potash, and ammonia; they are highly soluble in water, producing caustic or corrosive solutions, which neutralize strong acids, turn vegetable yellows to brown, reds to blue, and purples to green; in the decomposition of a compound they are relatively electro-positive.

'In its most restricted, but most usual sense, it is applied to four substances only: hydrate of potassium (potash), hydrate of sodium (soda), hydrate of lithium (lithia), and hydrate of ammonium (which may be supposed to exist in the aqueous solution of ammonia). In a more general sense it is applied to the hydrates of the so-called alkaline earths (baryta, strontia, and lime), and to a large number of organic substances both natural and artificial, [called] alkaloids and ammonium-bases. The first four bodies are sometimes spoken of as alkalis proper, when it is wished specially to distinguish them from the other bases.' WATTS *Dict. As these derivative vbs. were at length rarely used without all, the fact that the to- belonged to the vb. was lost sight of, and it was written separate, or even joined to all, as al to-torn, al to torn, alto torn. Obs.

E. all- in comb.

Combinations with all- as first element have existed from the earliest times, and have become, since c 1600, unlimited in number. In some groups the combination is merely syntactic, though even there individual instances of long standing have become true compounds; cf. the gradation in all alive, all-important, all-powerful, almighty. The stress is not on all except in a few real compounds as 'always, 'also. On these combinations as well as on simple phrases, derivatives are freely formed in which the loose union or non-union of the original elements is cemented by the formative process, so that all is no longer merely in syntactic combination with the rest of the word; thus all-pervadingness, all-eyed, cannot be analysed as all + pervadingness, all + eyed, but only as (all-pervading) + -ness, (all eyes) + -ed. The following general classification contains I. Simple combinations; II. Derivatives formed on these, and on phrases. Words in SMALL CAPITALS are treated in their alphabetical place in the sequel.

I. Simple combinations.

1. adject. with sb., as ALL-FOUR(S, -HAIL, -HALLOWS, -MIGHT, -NIGHT, -SAINTS, -SOULS, -SPICE (and their derivatives); all-power, omnipotence; all-wisdom.

6. advb. with adj., = 'wholly, altogether, infinitely.' About twenty of these combinations are found in OE. including eall-beorht, -ȝearo, -ȝeleáflic, -gréne, -gylden, -háliȝ, -hwít, -íren, -ísiȝ, -mihtiȝ, -nacod, -niwe, -riht, -seolcen, -teaw, -weald, -wérlíc. Of these ALL-HOLY, and ALMIGHTY, survived into ME. and were reinforced from time to time by -WITTY, -worthy, -wise, -GOOD, -merciful, -just. Since 1600, the number of these has been enormously extended, all- having become a possible prefix, in poetry at least, to almost any adj. of quality. Thus, all-able, -beauteous, -bitter, -black, -bountiful, -brilliant, -complete, -constant, -content, -divine, -dreadful, -earnest, -eloquent, -essential, -evil, -fair, -glorious, -golden, -gracious, -holy, -important, -just, -lavish, -lovely, -merciful, -peaceful, -perfect, -potential, -powerful, -praiseworthy, -prolific, -puissant, -pure, -rapacious, -righteous, -sacred, -substantial, -surfy, -true, -various, -vast, -wondrous. Hence as sb., all-fair, -wise. Also with the implication 'entirely, exclusively', as all-coloured, -red (sense 13 below), -white.

II. Confused with ALLEGE v.[1] to lighten or alleviate, both verbs being in 14th c. alegge, and both used of pains, etc., so that alegge peine was in the one sense = quell pain, in the other = alleviate pain. Both senses might be expressed by abate, and they came to be regarded as the same word, so that from c 1400 alaye was used for alegge in both (cf. Caxton's 't' alegge thurste,' see ALLEGE v.[1] 2, Gower's 'to allay thurst'); and finally alegge became obs., and allay remained with the combined meaning.

III. Confused with ALLAY v.[2], to alloy, mix, temper, qualify. The two verbs were from the 15th c. completely identical in form, and thus in appearance only different uses of the same word. (The earlier of the following senses are more closely related to the next vb. than to this; but it is, on the whole, more convenient to place them here, than under a word which is obs. or arch. in its own proper sense.)

¶See at the end of the prec. word, a number of senses combining the ideas of ALLAY, to alloy, or deteriorate, and ALLAY, to put down, abate, reduce, which might equally follow here. When these arose, the two verbs, originally distinct, had come to be viewed as one.

¶ In this sense now represented by ALLAY v.[1] The infinitive and certain other parts of these two vbs. were formally identical in ME., and when aleggen, :—OE. alecȝan, was levelled to aleye, allay (as explained under that vb.), this was also substituted for aleggen = OFr. alegier, giving the modern 'to allay hunger, pain, grief, fear': see ALLAY v.[1] II. Spenser has alegge as an archaism for allay:

allege (ə'leʤ), v.[2] Forms: 3-5 alegg-e, aleg-e, 4-6 allegge, 5-9 alledge, 5-6 adledge, 6-7 alledg, aleage, alleage, alleadg, alleadge, 4- allege. [Though allege answers exactly in sense to L. allēgāre and its Fr. adaptation alléguer, its soft g (ʤ) shows that it is not an adoption of this, which would have given alleague. But there was an OFr. esligier:—late L. exlītigāre* to clear at law, of which the Norm. form was aligier, alegier. This was latinized in England, as adlēgiāre, a word in regular use in the laws of the Norman kings (see Du Cange); and this adlēgiāre (as if f. ad lēgem) was evidently treated also as the equivalent of aleier (as if f. a lei), the true OFr. descendant of L. allēgāre (see ALLAY v.[3]). Hence, in later AFr., alegier (aleger, alegger), and its Eng. adoption alege, allege, though formally descended from exlītigare, were used as = L. allēgāre. (Cf. the technical use of the latter in Roman Law, in 'adlēgāre sē ex servitūte in ingenuitātem,' to release oneself ..by adducing reasons.) As in Fr. the forensic alléguer supplanted the popular aleier, so in Eng. allege took the place of ALLAY v.[3].

allograph[1] ('ælǝgrɑ:f, -æ-). [mod. f. Gr. ἄλλος other + γραφή writing. Cf. autograph.] A writing or signature made by one person on behalf of another.

allograph[2] ('ælǝʊgrɑ:f, -æ-). Philol. [f. ALLO- 3 + GRAPH(EME.] a. A particular form of a letter of an alphabet. b. One of a number of letters or letter-combinations representing a phoneme; thus f (in friend) and gh (in cough) are two of the allographs representing the phoneme /f/. Hence allo'graphic a.

1951 R. A. HALL JUN. in Archivum Linguisticum III. 117 We now have allomorph and morpheme, alloseme and sememe, allograph and grapheme. 1956 A. MCINTOSH in Trans. Philol. Soc. 43 At other times it [sc. the word 'letter'] is used of the particular allographic form a grapheme may have in a given context, e.g. when we speak of 'the s used in final position in Greek'; again it may be used of a single instance of an allograph, as when we say 'that's a badly formed letter'. 1962 *Amer. allom, obs. form of ALUM.

allomerism (æ'lɒmǝrɪz(ǝ)m). Chem. [mod. f. Gr. ἄλλος other, different + μέρ-ος part + -ISM.] A term applied by Cooke to the variation in chemical constitution without change of form, incident to those minerals that contain isomorphous constituents which may wholly or partially replace one other.

Allomerism is well shown in Amphibole; its typical composition is RO . SiO_2 in which RO represents any two or more of the bases magnesia (MgO), lime (CaO), oxide of iron (FeO), oxide of manganese (MnO), soda (N_2O), potash (K_2O) or water (H_2O); while the silica (SiO_2) is usually partly replaced by alumina (Al_2O_3) and often by the isomorphous sesquioxide of iron (Fe_2O_3).

allomerous (æ'lɒmǝrǝs), a. [f. as prec. + -OUS.] Liable to variation in constituent elements or as to the proportion in which these are present, without change in crystalline form.

Allomerous is (to some extent) the correlative of isomorphous; hornblende, tremolite, and edenite are isomorphous minerals, being varieties of the allomerous amphibole (see prec.); but distinct minerals are also isomorphous, as gold, platinum, and zinc; phosphate of lime (apatite) and phosphate of lead (pyromorphite); sesquioxide of iron and sesquioxide of manganese; which are not varieties of a single allomerous substance, though, as in the case of the two last mentioned, they may appear as isomorphous constituents of an allomerous compound mineral like amphibole or pyroxene.

allometry (æ'lɒmɪtrɪ). Biol. [f. ALLO- + -METRY.] (See quot. 1936.) Hence allo'metric a., pertaining to or exhibiting allometry.

1936 HUXLEY & TEISSIER in Nature 9 May 780/2 To denote growth of a part at a different rate from that of a body as a whole or of a standard, we propose the term allometry. Ibid., Positive and negative allometry denote respectively growth-rates of the part above and below that of the standard. 1938 Nature 3 Sept. 437/2 Limbs must exhibit positive heterogony, or allometry..during fœtal development. 1940 G. R. DE BEER Embryos & Ancestors iv. 25 The relative growth-rates of the allometric organ and of the body remain constant during long periods. 1941, 1942, 1949 [see ALLOMORPHOSIS 2]. 1959 Chambers's Encycl. I. 276/1 The huge claws of the adult lobster and the armament of the stag are thus evidently the outcome of a strongly positive allometric growth.

allomorph[1] ('ælǝʊmɔ:f). Min. [f. ALLO- + Gr. μορφή form.] A distinct crystalline form without change of chemical composition. Hence allo'morphic a.[1], allo'morphism.

1866 KING & ROWNEY in Q. Jrnl. Geol. Soc. XXII. I. 187 All these varieties are considered to belong to one axial system—the monoclinate; but being obviously of other forms than one, and as they are all chemically alike, we propose to call them allomorphs. Like aragonite, calcite is also subject to allomorphism. Ibid. 193 It is our present impression that flocculite is merely an allomorph of serpentine. Ibid., There is an allomorphic variety of serpentine known as chrysolite.

allomorph[2] ('ælǝʊmɔ:f). Philol. [f. ALLO- 3 + MORPH(EME.] A morphemic alternant; one of two or more morphs making up a morpheme. Hence allo'morphic a.[2]

1948 E. A. NIDA in Language XXIV. 420 Morphemic alternants can conveniently be called allomorphs. Accordingly, allomorphs are related to morphemes as allophones are related to phonemes. 1949 —— Morphology (ed. 2) ii. 21 Allomorphic differences of tone may be described in terms of different tonal surroundings. 1951 TRAGER & SMITH Outl. Eng. Struct. 11. 60 Suffixes, especially inflectional ones, usually have many allomorphs. 1953 C. E. BAZELL Ling. Form i. 8 Allomorphs are not to be regarded as segments, since this way of treating them gives rise to the impression that they are not minimal units. 1962 E. F. HADEN et al. Resonance-Theory Linguistics iii. 30 The forms..showed,..handed,..are..analyzable into stem + suffix:../ʃow/ + /d/, /hænd/ + /id/... Each of these endings signals the same grammatical meaning, namely, 'past', and they can all be classed together in the morpheme {-D} (or {past})... The several allomorphs of this morpheme ({M_1}) are statable as sets of phonemes, but more accurately as sets of allophones.

allomorphite (ælǝʊ'mɔ:faɪt). Min. [mod. f. Gr. ἀλλόμορφος of strange shape (f. ἄλλος other, different + μορφή form) + -ITE, min. form.] A mineral, allied to barytes or barite, of which Dana makes it a variety, having the form and cleavage of ANHYDRITE.

1837-80 DANA Min. 617 Allomorphite..probably pseudomorphous; Breithaupt regards it as a case of dimorphism.

allomorphosis (ælǝʊ'mɔ:fǝsɪs, -mɔ:'fǝʊsɪs). Biol. [f. ALLO- + MORPHOSIS.] 1. = METAMORPHOSIS (Mayne Expos. Lex. Add. 1860).

2. Evolutionary allometry: a term used for comparison of different phylogenetic groups (see quots.).

1941 J. S. HUXLEY et al. in Nature 23 Aug. 225/1 We wish to suggest that allometry be the covering term, and allomorphosis the term for phylogenetic comparison. This indicates that all these differences..concern differing rates of growth in the individual, and..different (morphological or chemical) patterns brought about..in the completed individual of different groups. Ibid., Allomorphosis, the relation of parts of organisms at some definite age to wholes or parts also at some definite age, but of different groups (races, varieties, species, genera). 1942 J. S. HUXLEY Evolution ix. 529 For comparison of relative proportions in different types it will..be best to use allomorphosis.. keeping allometry as a general and inclusive term. 1949 Blakiston's New Gould Med. Dict. 42/1 Allomorphosis, a type of allometry which deals with the relation of a part to the whole, or to another part, in a series of organisms..as the relation of jaw length to skull length of the adult in a series of breeds of dogs.

allosteric (ælɔu'stɛrɪk, -'stɪərɪk), a. Biochem. [f. ALLO- + STERIC a.] Pertaining to or involving a change in an enzyme's affinity for a substrate as a result of a change in its conformation by the attachment of a molecule not analogous to the substrate molecule at a site other than the substrate binding site; pertaining to any change in conformation caused by the attachment of a ligand.

1962 MONOD & JACOB in Cold Spring Harbor Symp. Quantitative Biol. XXVI. 391/1 In 1954, Novick and Szilard discovered that the synthesis of a tryptophan precursor .. was inhibited by tryptophan ... The work of Umbarger .. demonstrated that, in many pathways, an early enzyme is so constructed as to be strongly and specifically inhibited by the .. endproduct ... The most remarkable feature of the Novick-Szilard-Umbarger effect is that the inhibitor is not a steric analogue of the substrate. We propose therefore to designate this mechanism as 'allosteric inhibition'. 1962 H. A. KREBS in A. Pirie Lens Metabolism Rel. Cataract 351 In competition inhibitions, substrate and inhibitor react with the same site of the enzyme molecule. Allosteric inhibitions involve different sites. 1970 R. W. allotetraploid (ˌæləʊ'tɛtrəplɔɪd), a. and sb. Biol. [f. ALLO- 2 + TETRAPLOID.] = AMPHIDIPLOID a. and sb.

1930 W. J. C. LAWRENCE in Genetica XII. 272 Hybrid tetraploid (allo-tetraploid). Ibid. 277 The most probable origin of an allotetraploid would seem to be hybridisation of two self-incompatible diploid species. 1938 E. B. FORD Study Heredity x. 225 The allotetraploids..may be quite fertile forms, though sterile with the two species from which they are derived. Ibid. 239 An allotetraploid plant is as completely isolated from its parent species as if it had been transported to a desert island. 1957 M. ABERCROMBIE et al. Dict. Biol. 14 Allotetraploid (amphidiploid), allopolyploid which arises when an ordinary hybrid between two different species, containing a set of chromosomes from each parent, doubles its chromosome number. An ordinary hybrid is usually sterile because its chromosomes cannot pair during meiosis. But if it becomes an allotetraploid it solves this difficulty because each chromosome then has a homologue with which it can pair... Artificial preparation of allotetraploids has great scope in the production of new agricultural and horticultural varieties.

Hence allo'tetraploidy, the state or occurrence of such a tetraploid.

1942 J. S. HUXLEY Evolution iii. 87 Allotetraploidy is almost confined to plants, because of the favourable conditions provided by their vegetative growth for the rare chromosome-doubling.
